Eau Claire, Wisconsin

EAU CLAIRE COUNTY AND CHIPPEWA COUNTY

72,331 POPULATION

34.95 SQUARE MILES

32-33 MEDIAN AGE

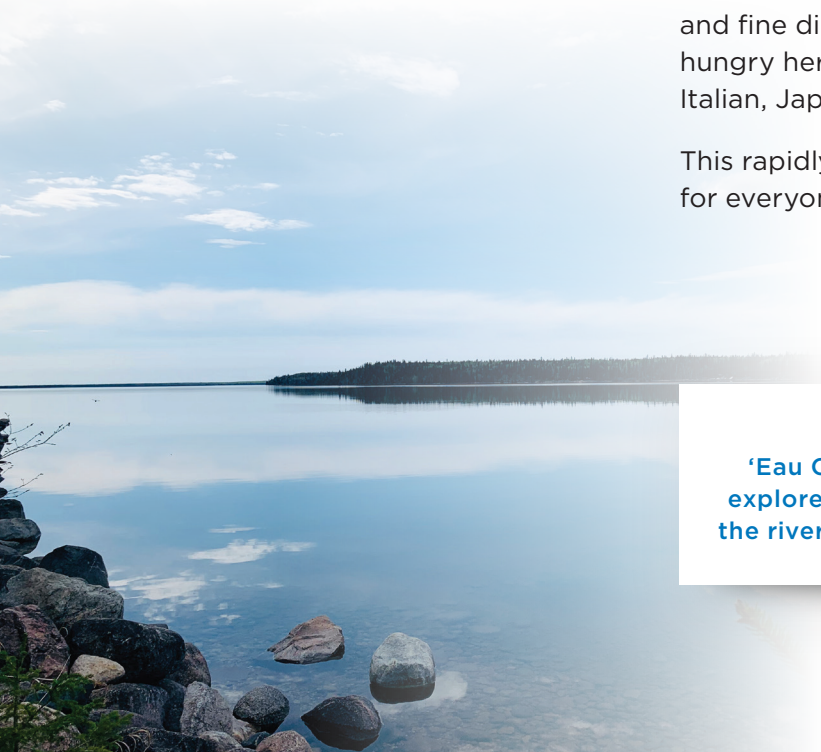

Eau Claire has been a gathering place for generations, bringing together both people passing through and those who make it home – much like the landscape that comes together in the heart of downtown. The city is built where the Chippewa and Eau Claire rivers meet.

The city has a large investment in the arts and live music scene. A highlight is the Pablo Center at the Confluence, a more than 1,200 seat theater with rehearsal, dance, and community rooms, visual arts galleries and more.

The University of Wisconsin – Eau Claire is another prominent part of the community. This walkable, 300-acre campus located along the banks of the Chippewa River has consistently ranked sixth or higher in national public university rankings since 1995.

For the foodies, Eau Claire offers plenty of casual and fine dining cuisine. Simply put, you won't go hungry here with a wide variety of choices including Italian, Japanese, Cajun, Mexican and more.

This rapidly growing Midwest hub offers something for everyone.

DID YOU KNOW?

'Eau Claire' is French for 'clear water.' French explorers named the area after seeing how clear the rivers are compared to the muddy Mississippi.

Rice Lake, Wisconsin

BARRON COUNTY

9,030 POPULATION

9.7 SQUARE MILES

36-37 MEDIAN AGE

Rice Lake, located in the scenic Red Cedar River Valley, is the largest community in Barron County. It offers many conveniences of city living while remaining closely connected to nature.

Its history dates back centuries, long before European settlers arrived in the area. The land around the lake was originally inhabited by the Ojibwe people. In the 1860s, John Knapp bought acres of forest in the area that became property owned by Knapp, Stout & Co., the largest lumber company in the world. The city was divided into streets and lots from the 1870s through 1880s. As part of that plan, they reserved a 100-foot-wide main street, which eventually became the city's business district.

Rice Lake is surrounded by some of the finest ATV trails, fishing and boating lakes, parks, recreational trails and scenery in northwest Wisconsin. There is never a shortage of outdoor activities to enjoy during all four seasons.

This Northwoods gem is a great place to live, work and raise a family. Residents enjoy quality schools, safe neighborhoods, short commutes and clean air and water.

This welcoming community has a strong sense of pride and connection to its past, while embracing the future.

HISTORY SNAPSHOT:
Rice Lake's name came from the wild rice that grew abundantly in its waters, providing a vital food source for the Ojibwe people.
